ANHRI's comment

- 1-The Supreme State Security Prosecution's decision to conduct the detention renewal sessions in the presence of pretrial detainees in the cases in which it is presiding over at the headquarters of the Public Prosecution came to end an illegal situation that lasted for more than a year and a half, which is "the phenomenon of on-paper detention renewal" emerged since the coronavirus pandemic, denying the accused or his defense an opportunity to deny the accusation against him.
- 2- The Mansoura Emergency State Security Misdemeanour Court judge ordering the release of Patrick George, researcher at the Egyptian Initiative for Personal Rights (EIPR), who has been tried on a charge of spreading false news after his pretrial detention continued for more than a year and a half, constitute a late step towards implementing the provisions of the law which stipulates that pretrial detention (in Misdemeanor cases) may not exceed six months.
- 3- The decision issued by the Second Terrorism Circuit at Giza Criminal Court, convened at the Police Cadets Institute in Tora, to extend the detention of human rights lawyer Amr Imam and engineer Yehia Hussein Abdel Hadi, despite having reached the maximum limit of pretrial detention stipulated in the Code of Criminal Procedure, makes their detention, along with other pretrial detainees, deem illegal. Therefore, the Public Prosecutor must issue a decision ordering their mandatory release.
- 4- The ruling sentencing 4 officials at Al-Marg Penal Institution for Juveniles for only three years, in the incident of the fire that broke out at one of the wards of the institution leaving 6 children killed, has revealed the paradox in our judicial courts, which may hand down a high-security 5-year prison sentence for merely publishing a news that was claimed to be false. And this re-raises the old and new questions about the nature and limits of the discretionary power of judges and the criteria they support when issuing judgments and rulings.
- 5- While 1,035 pretrial detainees have appeared before Giza Terrorism Criminal Court to consider their detention renewal on charges derived from the Terrorism Law, the court released only 24 of them, making the suffering of others continue under the weight of pretrial detention despite the fact that many of them have already exceeded the stipulated maximum periods. Legally, they are called "in prison but outside of the law."
